

DTEX HOST WIKILEAKS EVENT IN MAY

The WikiLeaks controversy has highlighted to the world that managing the often conflicting needs and objectives of the State, the Organisation, and the Individual is a highly complex balancing act. As the political and monetary value of our information continues to grow exponentially, how do we establish and maintain a balance between; citizens' right to information and the need for political/corporate secrecy; protective monitoring and a surveillance state; censorship and freedom of information?

In order to stimulate this discussion, Dtex will be hosting a high profile debate entitled 'AN INFORMATION WAR?': Balancing National Security, Trade Secrets & the Rights of the Individual'. It will be held at Australia House, London in May and guests will include many of the UK's top CIOs. The debate-style forum, chaired by Sir Edmund Burton KBE, will see several high profile speakers including Peter Erceg (Head of IT Security, T-Mobile) and John Suffolk (former CIO and SIRO of HMG) take centre stage to discuss their unique perspective of a 'balanced approach', and what this will mean for the UK government, CNI organisations and citizens in the years to come. The invitation-only debate and drinks reception will be opened by the Australian High Commissioner for the UK. Queries can be sent to michelle.rogers@dtexsystems.com

'AN INFORMATION - WAR?'

Balancing National Security, Trade Secrets &
the Rights of the Individual

Panel Discussion followed by Drinks Reception

Australian Government
Australian Trade Commission

Co-ordinated by Dtex Systems & hosted by Australian Trade Commission